General Elections

What is a general election?

In Pennsylvania, general elections give voters the opportunity to choose the candidates who will represent them in local, state, and federal offices. Unlike a primary election, where voters select their party's nominees, the general election determines who will ultimately hold each office. Candidates from different political parties, as well as qualifying independent and third-party candidates, may appear on the ballot.

Who can vote in a general election?

All registered Pennsylvania voters can participate in the general election, regardless of political party affiliation. This includes voters registered as Democratic, Republican, independent, or with another political party. To vote, you must be a U.S. citizen for at least one month before the election, a resident of Pennsylvania and your election district for at least 30 days before the election, and at least 18 years old on Election Day. Voters should also make sure their registration is up to date if they have moved, changed their name, or changed their political party affiliation.

How Do I Vote in a Primary Election?

If you're voting in-person...

- First, find your polling location. If you've recently moved, make sure your voter registration is updated so you're assigned to the correct polling place.
- Plan what time you'll go and how you'll get there. In Pennsylvania, polls are open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. If you're in line by 8 p.m., you have the right to vote.
- Know what to bring. If it's your first time voting at a particular polling place, you'll need to show ID; acceptable forms include a driver's license, U.S. passport, student ID, or utility bill with your name and address.
